John Carty focuses his practice on handling complex civil litigation cases such as products liability, construction and mass tort claims. He is actively engaged in every aspect of his clients' investigative processes and has handled matters in every stage of litigation — from emergency response through trial and/or alternative dispute resolution.

Before joining Stradley Ronon, John was a litigation associate at a Philadelphia law firm. After completing law school, he served as a clerk for Judge Nan Famular in the New Jersey Superior Court, Camden County Vicinage, Chancery and General Equity Division. His duties included handling cases involving residential and commercial mortgage foreclosures, contract disputes, corporate shareholder conflicts, property disagreements, probate litigation and petitions for equitable relief. Additionally, he has been trained as a family law clerk.

John obtained his J.D. from Temple University Beasley School of Law, where he participated in its renowned Trial Advocacy Program and was a recipient of the Beasley Scholarship. He was also honored with the Louis C. Portella Memorial Scholarship Award from the Camden County Bar Foundation in recognition of his outstanding academic and community achievements.

Prior to law school, John earned his B.A. from Ursinus College, where he served as vice president of the Haines-Bernard Pre-Legal Society.
