Randy Friedberg is a member of the firm’s business department. As a seasoned intellectual property attorney, Randy has advised clients and businesses of all sizes for over 30 years on trademark and copyright law, unfair competition, trade secrets, advertising, internet and cyber issues, rights of privacy and publicity, entertainment law, and general corporate and litigation matters. With a particular focus on entertainment and media companies, including advertising and marketing agencies, Randy often provides counsel on protection, licensing and enforcement of intellectual property rights – routinely finding creative solutions to highly technical and complex issues. He has represented a broad range of industries, including consumer goods and services, computer software and hardware, pharmaceutical and biomedical products, non-profits, energy and financial services.

Randy is currently serving a three-year term as chair of the Entertainment Law Committee of the New York City Bar Association. He is also a frequent author and speaker on navigating issues related to intellectual property.

Randy received his J.D. from Duke University School of Law and his B.A. from Binghamton University.
