Adam M. Kaplan concentrates his practice on complex litigation with a focus on consumer lending and financial services. For more than a decade, Adam has represented financial institutions in matters related to consumer and commercial financial products. He is experienced in defending claims under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), Truth in Lending Act (TILA), Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA), Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), and Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), as well as various state unfair and deceptive trade practices laws. Adam also has extensive experience with title and foreclosure litigation. He has been lead counsel in cases at the trial and appellate levels of both state and federal courts.

In addition to his work as a litigator, Adam regularly counsels clients on issues of regulatory compliance and advises on enforcement actions and investigations by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and state Attorneys General.

Prior to joining Stradley Ronon, Adam worked at one of Maryland's largest creditor's rights firms, where he represented financial institutions in a variety of contested matters. He also has experience representing contractors and material providers in construction litigation.
