STRADLEY
RONON

Overview

Playing a critical role in shaping this rapidly growing area of the investment management landscape, Stradley Ronon represents a broad range of exchange-traded funds (ETFs), their investment advisers and/or their independent directors ranging from representations involving three of the four largest ETF groups in the United States, multiple representations of top 30 ETF groups, and representations of startup ETF groups. We guide our clients in navigating the complex regulatory and market environments in which ETFs are developed, launched and operated. We also work with boards of directors on all aspects of the establishment and oversight of ETFs.

On the Forefront of the ETF Landscape

Our firm has been involved at all stages in some of the most innovative and groundbreaking investment products, including exchange-traded products (ETPs) that are not registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940. In the burgeoning cryptocurrency arena, we were counsel to one of the industry's first spot bitcoin ETPs to launch in the United States and one of several spot ether ETPs to receive listing approval from the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), marking the second type of spot digital asset ETP in the country. We also supported our clients in creating niche investment products such as a physically backed gold ETP with an environmental, social and governance (ESG) focus and represented one of the first asset managers to launch active transparent ETFs using SEC Rule 6c-11. We spearheaded the legal work to introduce exchange-traded managed funds (ETMFs) and also helped clients obtain exemptive relief from the SEC to introduce actively managed ETFs that do not publish their portfolios on a daily basis (semi-transparent active ETFs).

Breaking the Mold

In an industry with meteoric growth, we develop creative approaches that help our clients to distinguish themselves and break the mold. On behalf of the largest actively managed ETF group, we assisted with the first major conversions of mutual funds to ETFs — an innovative way for an asset manager to enter the highly competitive ETF space with significant existing assets and investors. We serve as trusted counsel to numerous independent directors, advising on the launch of a variety of innovative ETF products, including target-date ETFs, option overlay ETFs, thematic ETFs, single-country ETFs and target maturity bond ETFs. We also are working with various asset managers to obtain breakthrough exemptive relief to allow for ETF share classes. Our thoughtful analysis and vigorous advocacy, combined with our deep understanding of the SEC, allow us to counsel ETF providers on how best to achieve their business goals. In particular, our deep bench of former SEC staff members ensures that we understand ETF regulatory policy, which can be critical to persuading the SEC to permit ETF innovation.

Our Services

Our firm is well-versed in counseling both established ETF groups and new entrants to the ETF marketplace, including providing strategic advice on product development and structure. We prepare the full range of documentation required to establish and operate new ETFs, including governance documentation, compliance policies and operational procedures. We also
