

Michael J. Driscoll

Assistant Special Agent in Charge, Philadelphia Division

Federal Bureau of Investigation

Michael was a practicing attorney before joining the FBI in 1996. Since then, he has served in the FBI's New York Office, Headquarters, and, most recently, the Legal Attaché's Office in London, leading their Cyber Investigations program. He has been responsible for some of the FBI's most significant international cases and has represented the FBI in over forty countries, addressing a variety of threats. In 2002, he received the U.S. Attorney General's Award for Distinguished Service for his work on the investigation of Al Qaeda. Michael has provided training and instruction on FBI international investigations to law enforcement and private sector audiences around the world. He is currently the Assistant Special Agent in Charge for the Philadelphia Division, responsible for their Cyber and Counterintelligence programs.
